FCA looks for external experts to help shape its work on ESG issues

Climate change and other environmental, social and governance (ESG) matters are increasingly central to the activities of listed companies, regulated firms and consumers.

Financial services and markets have an important role to play in the transition to a more sustainable future. The pressure is also increasing on business to be more purposeful and responsible. The FCA aims to make sure that their regulatory approach creates an environment in which market participants can manage the risks from moving to a more sustainable economy and capture opportunities to benefit consumers.

Their commitment to their ESG strategy is evidenced in them now forming a committee to help execute its ESG-related responsibilities. This includes meeting the Government's expectation that they 'have regard' to the UK's commitment to achieving a net zero economy by 2050.

ESG – So what is it all about?

As the world of Financial Services grows more complex by the year, especially when you factor in the changes brought by the global pandemic. ESG has certainly become a key topic for boards and their senior managers to discuss and debate as they refine their corporate position on the topic. But what does it stand for? What does it mean? Why should firms (and consumers) be sitting up and taking notice?.....
